Methods of Evaluation

- Classroom Discussions
 - Example: Students will be evaluated using minute papers and other forms of CATs such as pro/con grids (Formative assessments) For example, when discussing funding sources, student answers would be evaluated on a pro/con grid. In this way, instructor could assess whether students accurately understand the benefits of certain funding sources or the instructor could provide feedback to clear up any confusion. Objective 6. Identify funding sources and start-up resources to address a social problem.
- Projects
 - Example: Students develop a start-up plan that will be evaluated using a rubric (Summative assessment). The start-up plan follows the course workbook (textbook) and meets the following objectives: 6. Identify funding sources and start-up resources to address social problem. 7. Develop a qualified advisory group. 8. Define and segment the target population 9. Analyze the most competitive alternative. 10. Prepare a plan to launch and scale a social enterprise.

Writing, Problem Solving or Performance

I. Use the Social Entrepreneur's Playbook and answer the following:
1. What is the social problem I wish to address? Who is suffering? What are they suffering from and when? What's causing this suffering? How many people are affected? Where are they located? 2. What is my solution? How will my enterprise alleviate this problem? Who and how many will benefit? What major cost will be incurred? How will revenue (income) be generated? or how will operating funds be secured? 3. What will beneficiaries have to do differently for my proposed solution to work? What behavior changes am I seeking on the part of the target beneficiaries? How difficult will it be for us to effect these behavior changes? II. Using the following PDF, compare and contrast the unique characteristics of profit-oriented entrepreneurs and social entrepreneurs. With which of these characteristics do you most closely identify? http://timreview.ca/sites/default/files/article_PDF/Saifan_TIMReview_February2012_0.pdf
